Leaving Mount Vernon

A social narrative for where to go when I’m ready to leave Mount Vernon, get food, or visit the museum store.
Parts of Mount Vernon are currently under construction, so there are multiple ways to exit. If I want to visit the Donald W. Reynolds Museum, I can.

The exhibits can be loud. Some spaces are dark and some are bright.
The Education Center is currently closed and under construction. There may be construction going on. I may hear loud noises.

The serpentine hallway is also closed. This is to keep me safe. To leave, I will go back up the stairs I came down.
To exit, I can take either of these paths.
The gravel path leads me to the white gate I entered through. It goes up and down a small hill.
The brick path takes me back to the Orientation Center. I came through this building when I first arrived.
I can take this brick path down to the gift shop if I want to.
If I do, I will walk through this room. The floor looks like a map.

Sometimes there are many people in this lobby.
If I’m hungry, I can get food and water outside at the Food Truck, or inside at the Food Court or Mount Vernon Inn.
I may walk past the museum store.
That’s all for today! Thank you visiting Mount Vernon!
